RPAC: Plastic surgery: end of the liposuction?

PARIS -- (BUSINESS WIRE) -- To lose centimetres without surgery nor drug? An old dream is carried out. A European medical team directed by Doctor Thierry Pirmez made a success of first world by developing a correction of silhouette without resorting to a surgical act but while obtaining a sure and tempting result.

The principle is simple. The lubricating cell comprises doors D'privileged entries, of the proteins called Aquaporines. These doors S'open thanks to keys. L'explination and the proof of this mechanism was rewarded by a Nobel Prize of chemistry in 2003, granted to L'American Peter Agre, Professor of famous Johns Hopkins University.

L'originality was D'to use a natural component, the propanetriol, activator of these doors, to inflate the lubricating cell by subjecting it to a flow of hypotonic sterile liquid (osmotic gradient). Thus weakened, it breaks under L'effect of the massage coming to supplement L'infiltration.

In practice, the whole lasts hardly two hours. Only one meeting – as in liposuction – definitively involve a loss in centimetres of L'order D'a size of clothing: less three with less six centimetres, with prowesses with less fifteen centimetres (sic). More than three miles people of the two sexes and of all races were already treated successfully according to this protocol. The process has D'elsewhere already received L'approval (marking) EC.

With living room MEDICA of Düsseldorf, the experts S'granted to think that this technique constitutes a revolution in the world of L'esthetics. It could quite simply replace the liposuction and the liposculpture viellissantes.

Lastly, and C'is there an important point, the price of L'intervention remains unbeatable: less than fifty pourcents of the price D'a traditional liposuction is between 395 € and 1000 €, which explains the sharp success already met in Asia.
